II. EXPLANATION OF PROVISIONS

A. INCREASE IN THE LIMIT ON THE PUBLIC DEBT

Present Law

The present permanent limit on the public debt is $1.52 trillion, which was enacted on May 25, 1984 (Public Law 98-302). A permanent debt limit has no expiration date.

Reasons for Change

The public debt limit was increased by $30 billion in May, an amount expected to be adequate for the Treasury Department's minimum financing needs through June, 1984. Congress believed that it would have a clear picture at this time of the budget for fiscal year 1985 and then would be able to determine the appropriate debt limit. Unfortunately, the time spent on budget-determining matters deprived Congress of time to work on appropriations bills, and the legislative schedule is backed up with appropriations bills.

Consequently, the committee has decided to provide sufficient debt authority only through August. This limited action would provide time to see what progress has been made on enacting the Conference Report on the First Budget Resolution for Fiscal Year 1985 and the appropriations bills and what the availability of funds for the federal programs means for the level of debt to be incurred.

The committee regrets the necessity for this sequence of short-time extensions of the debt limit, but it feels that it has no other choice during this period of great uncertainty about success in reducing the levels of federal deficits and the resultant implications for determining the appropriate debt limit.

Explanation of Provision

The committee approved an increase of $53 billion which will set the permanent limit on the public debt at $1,573 billion. Treasury Department estimates indicate that this level of debt authority will meet federal government fiscal requirements through August 1984, given the Administration's most recent budget estimates.
